Clinical Psychologist

During my career as a clinical psychologist I have worked with clients across the life span providing comprehensive neuropsychological assessments and offering integrative psychological therapies to clients with varying physical, neuropsychological and mental health needs. My current role in the NHS involves assessing older adults and aiding differential diagnosis to possible dementias. I am responsible for providing post diagnostic support, encouraging psychological adjustment and supporting cognitive rehabilitation. I also have substantial experience in formulation both individualised and in consultation with families and multidisciplinary teams. Therapeutically, I offer integrative psychological therapies to enable the individual needs, values and resources of the client to be met. I work with individuals experiencing psychological distress in all its forms including anxiety, depression, psychoses and those with inter-relational difficulties. To enable a person-centred therapy, I draw from a variety of models and approaches including CBT, CFT, ACT, and mindful approaches.
